

Problems for the British Community

At the moment the British Community (BC) is very badly designed. Some problems are

- The administration does not have a brain, or any other structure.
- There is no plan for organised growth.
- The plan for self-modification is incoherent.
- There is no democratic consultation procedure.
- There is no social structural design.
- There are no apparent resources.
- There are no response mechanisms.
- There is no data collection service.
- There are no people involved in it.
- There is no media presence.
- There are no services.

We could improve.